Moving Online? Let the Library Come With You

Laurie Borchard and Anna Fidgeon, Oviatt Library

As more and more classes are moving online, hybrid or going to a flipped format, the library can still provide information literacy instruction and general library skills through online tutorials in Moodle or on the web. Online tutorials are ubiquitous, reusable, and portable and can meet various needs in the classroom. To support online classes, the library has created a library lesson repository in Moodle where faculty can find and pull instructional content for their students directly. We also have a team of librarians devoted to creating online tutorials and instructional content tailored to your students’ research needs.

Find Us
Did you know we have digital learning objects available to you on a range of research skills, including: writing an annotated bibliography, evaluating websites, finding books in the library, and more? Find us on social media, the library website, and our blog, Cited At The Oviatt.

Moodle Library Lesson Repository
The Library Lesson Repository in Moodle gives you access to DLOs that we have created that can be embedded in your Moodle page or used in the classroom.
E-mail us for access.

What Can We Do For You?

Digital Learning Objects, or DLOs, are digital, reusable tutorials that can include images, text, video, animations, quizzes, games, or any combination of these. Librarians at the Oviatt library create DLOs to help students with research skills, information literacy, as well as using particular library and research tools (such as databases). DLOs follow the same learning principles as face-to-face instruction with the added benefit of being reusable, interactive, and used at the students’ convenience. You can incorporate DLOs in your Moodle page, use them in class, assign them as homework, or in any way you choose.

Customized DLOs
Do you have a specific assignment that your students need help with? Are your students struggling with research or college-level information literacy skills?

We can create customized Digital Learning Objects in conjunction with your library subject liaison.
