

This picture was brought into the courtroom by the artist, Nancy Davis, to flash to Mr. Manson. The artist, a beautiful blonde lady who came into court with semi-diaphanous white pants, bare midriff and a smile was thrown out of the seat that she had persuaded NBC to supply her. Manson scholarship is divided as to the reason for her removal. One school of thought believes she was thrown out because of her bare midriff, spotted by Judge Older as she walked down the aisle of the courtroom. Another school contends that her transgression was that she was seen flashing the drawing. The drawing itself has an interesting history. Originally she had made a drawing of Mr. Manson which her boyfriend, waxing wroth, had torn up and flushed. She, in defiance, consulted the pictures in Rolling Stone Magazine and drew this new picture which she brought to the court.
